Jeans for Genes Day

- Everyone has differences in their genes, it's just part of what makes you special, but very occasionally a difference in someone's genes can cause a problem with the way their body works. When this happens it's called a 'genetic disorder'.
- About 1 in every 33 children born have a genetic disorder – that's about the same as one in every class in this school. Many of these conditions have no current treatment and many more have no cure. The children and families affected by these conditions are the reason why we donated money
- These are just some of the children who will be helped by the money this school raised. Just like you and me, each of these children have differences in their genes that help to make each of them unique. But even though some of them might look a little different from you, and in some ways their bodies might work a little differently from yours, it's important to remember that deep down we're all pretty similar.
